"Mystic in the 1950's" By Tom Santos

If you grew up in the 50s, this book will make you say "I remember that! CAUTION it may cause hours of discussing the "Good Old Days," and what it was like growing up in a small village in the 50s.

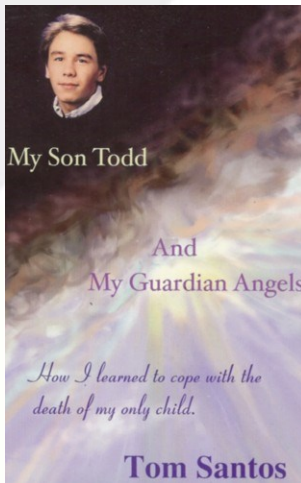

"I wrote the book to preserve the memories of a quaint little village called Mystic. We have several writings of the old Mystic dating back to the origination of Mystic. But I couldn't find anything that showed the building of Mystic as it is today. The fifties were a time of change, businesses were all mom & pop stores, everybody knew everybody, and it was affordable to live in Mystic. Children could roam the streets go "downtown" and not be bothered, the streets were safe. The traffic was light, a lot of families didn't own a car or need one. The fifties were a peaceful time, families were close, most families had only one worker. I remember the fifties as a time of discovery, discovering what life was like growing up and what left indelible impressions on that young mind, that carry on today. The fifties should be remembered as the years Mystic grew to become what it is today. I want to have readers walk through town in the book and see what I saw back then. For those who lived in the 50s, the subject matter may cause many hours of discussions and memory awakening."

"My Son Todd and My Guardian Angels" By Tom Santos

A father's story of how he coped with the loss of his only child. It took 10 years to write this informative, straight-from-the-heart book.

This is Tom's first book about what it's like to lose a child and how he survived. The book gives hope to others that they too will survive. Therapists are using the book to help with their clients. "My Son Todd and My Guardian Angels" has received acclaimed reviews in several local newspapers. Family members and friends of those who have lost children use the book to help educate them to understand what it's like to lose a loved one.
